Responsiveness

has a different screen ratio and screen resolution, websites should be able to adapt to all of them. Don't you just find it frustrating when you have to scroll between left and right to read a webpage on your phone? I do, which is why
